Early Life and Education

Albert Goodwin was born in 1863 in Birmingham, England. His father was a successful businessman, and his mother was a talented artist. Goodwin showed an early interest in art, and he began taking lessons at the Birmingham School of Art when he was just 14 years old. In 1881, Goodwin won a scholarship to the Royal Academy of Arts in London. He studied at the Royal Academy for four years, and he quickly became one of the most promising students in his class.

Career

After graduating from the Royal Academy, Goodwin began his career as an artist. He worked in a variety of media, including painting, drawing, and illustration. Goodwin's work was well-received, and he soon gained a reputation as one of the most talented artists of his generation. He exhibited his work at the Royal Academy and other prestigious galleries, and he also worked on a number of important commissions, including the decoration of the Houses of Parliament.

Personal Life

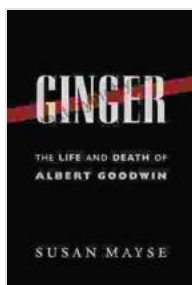

Goodwin's personal life was not as successful as his professional life. He struggled with mental illness for much of his life, and he was often unable to control his drinking. Goodwin's mental illness led to a number of problems, including financial difficulties and strained relationships with his family and friends. In 1914, Goodwin was admitted to a mental hospital. He died in the hospital a few months later.

Legacy

Despite his personal struggles, Albert Goodwin left behind a legacy of beautiful and inspiring artwork. His work is represented in museums and galleries around the world, and he is considered to be one of the most important artists of the Aesthetic Movement. Goodwin's work continues to inspire artists and collectors today, and his legacy will continue to live on for many years to come.
