Defense Against Grips and Strikes

When a strong opponent grabs one's leg or arm, a strike, well done, must always move smoothly beyond the range of the opponent's free hand, or Uchi Uchi Ryū. This is one way to take his balance and the possibility of causing a painful accident. (See Uchi Uchi Ryū method). The opponent won't look forward to another fight.

Use grips (left) of the legs to slip the grip and over use a hand and so use it close to the body (the other hand) next.

At the same time, use moves diagonally forward and backwards with a Uchi Uchi Ryū block. At the same time, use the Uchi Uchi Ryū block when struck, prevents a lot of pain.

Become a Modern-Day Ninja

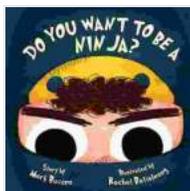

While the traditional role of the ninja may have evolved, the skills and principles they embodied remain invaluable in today's world. Do You Want To Be Ninja? empowers you to apply ninja techniques to enhance your personal and professional life. Learn how to:
