A Unique Beginning

The genesis of the 10th Mountain Division lay in a groundbreaking idea: the creation of an elite force proficient in mountain combat. Recognizing the strategic importance of mountainous terrain, the US Army sought individuals with exceptional skiing and mountaineering skills.

In 1942, a motley crew of skiers, mountaineers, and outdoor enthusiasts answered the call. They hailed from diverse backgrounds, united by their love of adventure and an unwavering determination to serve their country.

Training for the Unthinkable

The grueling training regimen pushed the men to their physical and mental limits. They endured arduous hikes carrying heavy packs through rugged mountain terrain. They mastered skiing techniques, scaling treacherous slopes and navigating extreme conditions.

Beyond physical prowess, the troops developed a deep understanding of mountain warfare tactics. They learned to fight in snow and ice, negotiate icy cliffs, and survive in hostile alpine environments.

Into the Crucible of Combat

In 1943, the 10th Mountain Division deployed to Italy, where they faced the formidable German army in the brutal terrain of the Apennine Mountains. Their first major engagement, the Battle of Riva Ridge, tested their mettle.

Against overwhelming odds, the Ski Troops fought valiantly, using their superior mobility and mountain warfare expertise to outmaneuver the enemy. Their ascent of Riva Ridge, a seemingly impregnable fortification, became a legendary feat.

In subsequent battles, the 10th Mountain Division played a pivotal role in breaking through German defenses, capturing key positions, and liberating Italian towns.

Beyond the Mountains

The Ski Troops' contributions extended beyond the battlefield. They established and maintained vital supply routes, trained local resistance groups, and provided humanitarian aid to war-ravaged communities.

Their legacy as mountain warriors was firmly cemented, and their pioneering efforts paved the way for the establishment of modern mountain warfare units around the world.
